RES JUDICATA

Allowance of claim

SCOPE OF REVIEW

Allowance of claim

Although the Board exceeded its scope of review in a prior appeal in this claim when it ordered that the claim be allowed as a "temporary" aggravation of a pre-existing condition, that decision is final and the doctrine of res judicata prevents the Board from making a decision inconsistent with the prior determination regarding the temporary nature of the condition. ...In re Orena Houle, BIIA Dec., 00 11628 (2001) [Editor's Note: Consider application of holding of In re Keith Browne, BIIA Dec., 06 13972 (2007).]

15
16 The claimant, Orena A. Houle, filed an appeal with the Board of Industrial Insurance Appeals
17 on February 15, 2000, from an order of the Department of Labor and Industries dated January 14,
18 2000. The order affirmed the Department order of April 30, 1999, which had closed the claim
19 without further award for time loss compensation or permanent partial disability. The January 14, 20 2000 order also determined that the claim had been accepted as a temporary aggravation of the 21 claimant's pre-existing asthma and emphysema conditions. AFFIRMED.

28 DECISION

29
30 Pursuant to RCW 51.52.104 and RCW 51.52.106, this matter is before the Board for review
31 and decision on a timely Petition for Review filed by the claimant to a Proposed Decision and Order
32 issued on September 29, 2000, in which the order of the Department dated January 14, 2000, was 33 affirmed.
34
35

36
37
38 Orena A. Houle, a 59 year-old resident of Ewa Beach, Hawaii, filed an industrial insurance
39 claim on April 19, 1994, in which she alleged exposure to resin and glue fumes while in the course
40 of her employment with the K-2 Corporation of Vashon Island. Her claim was allowed and benefits 41 provided.

1 In 1997, a disagreement arose as to whether Ms. Houle was temporarily totally disabled
2
3 from the spring of 1996 through March of 1997 as a proximate result of her industrial condition.
4
5 The Department of Labor and Industries issued an order dated March 7, 1997, which directed the 6
7 self-insured employer, K-2 Corporation, to pay time loss for the period in question. K-2 Corporation
8
9 appealed, arguing that Ms. Houle had fully recovered from her exposure to workplace fumes such 10
11 that K-2 was no longer obligated to pay benefits.

12
13 This Board heard the appeal, identified by Docket No. 97 2041. Based on the 14
15 preponderance of credible evidence, we established that during the period of April 5, 1996 through 16
17 March 7, 1997, Ms. Houle had no physical restrictions relating to her January 27, 1994 occupational 18
19 exposure. We further found that "As a proximate result of her January 27, 1994 occupational 20
21 exposure while working for K-2 Corp., the claimant sustained a temporary aggravation of her
22
23 pre-existing asthma and emphysema." 12/12/97 Decision and Order, at 2. (Emphasis added.)
24
25 Following Ms. Houle's appeal to Superior Court, our Decision and Order of December 12, 1997, 26
27 Docket No. 97 2041, became final.

28
29 On January 14, 2000, the Department of Labor and Industries issued the order that gave 30
31 rise to the current appeal. In its order, the Department affirmed its closing order of April 30, 1999,
32
33 and stated, "IT IS FURTHER ORDERED THAT THIS IS ACCEPTED AS A TEMPORARY 34
35 AGGRAVATION OF PRE-EXISTING ASTHMA AND EMPHYSEMA CONDITIONS." Ms. Houle
36
37 appealed. Pleading in the alternative, she sought either further treatment, a permanent partial 38
39 disability award, or a total disability pension.

40
41 The employer filed a motion for summary judgment. Our industrial appeals judge
42
43 considered the motion and determined that there were no genuine issues of material fact. Our 44
45 judge further determined that it was res judicata that as a proximate result of the January 27, 1994
46
47 occupational exposure, Ms. Houle developed a temporary aggravation of her pre-existing asthma

1 and emphysema. He concluded that because Ms. Houle's condition was temporary, she was not
2
3 entitled to further benefits within the meaning of Title 51 RCW.
4

5 Ms. Houle responded to our industrial appeals judge's ruling by filing a Petition for Review,
6
7 bringing the matter before the Board again. She argued that the Board had gone too far in its
8
9 earlier decision when it determined that her condition was temporary, noting that the subject of the 10
11 March 7, 1997 Department order related to time loss compensation. The issue of whether her 12
13 condition was temporary or permanent had not been passed on by the Department of Labor and 14
15 Industries and was not properly before the Board. Ms. Houle argued that she was not legally
16
17 precluded from seeking further benefits by way of her appeal of the closing order.
18

19 Two questions arise: First, did the Board go beyond its scope of review in Docket
20
21 No. 97 2041 when it determined that Ms. Houle experienced a temporary aggravation of a 22
23 pre-existing condition? Second, if the Board exceeded the scope of review, what legal 24
25 consequences flow from that determination?
26

27 Without belaboring the matter, we find that we did exceed the scope of our review under 28
29 Docket No. 97 2041. Arguably, it would have been sufficient in our first decision to simply conclude 30
31 that Ms. Houle experienced an aggravation of a pre-existing condition and omit mention of whether 32
33 it was temporary or permanent. Inclusion of the word "temporary" was technically not essential for 34
35 deciding the question of Ms. Houle's employability or entitlement to time loss compensation.
36
37 Quoting In re Darlene Ross, BIIA Dec., 88 4379 (1990), "[W]e exceeded our authority in the prior 38
39 appeal by, in effect, making an advance determination regarding permanent disability." With that 40
41 said, we turn to examine the question of what legal consequences flow from exceeding the scope of 42
43 review.
44

45 The Department of Labor and Industries has original jurisdiction in matters relating to 46
47 industrial insurance. The Legislature has granted the Department broad authority to decide claims

1 for workers' compensation. See RCW 51.04.020. The Department has original and exclusive
2
3 jurisdiction, in all cases where claims are presented, to determine the mixed question of law and
4
5 fact as to whether a compensable injury has occurred. Marley v. Department of Labor & Indus.,
6
7 125 Wn.2d 533, 540 (1994); citing Abraham v. Department of Labor & Indus., 178 Wash. 160, 163
8
9 (1934).

10
11 The Board's jurisdiction, on the other hand, is appellate only and is considerably more
12
13 limited than that of the Department. It is not disputed that the Board's and the Superior Court's 14
15 jurisdiction is appellate only, and for the Board and the trial court to consider matters not first 16
17 determined by the Department would usurp the prerogatives of the Department, the agency vested
18
19 by statute with original jurisdiction. Lenk v. Department of Labor & Indus., 3 Wn. App. 977, 982
20
21 (1970), citing Cole v. Department of Labor & Indus., 137 Wash. 538 (1926). If a question is not
22
23 passed upon by the Department, it cannot be reviewed either by the Board or the Superior Court.
24
25 The questions the Board may consider and decide are fixed by the order from which the appeal
26
27 was taken (see Woodard v. Department of Labor & Indus., 188 Wash. 93 (1936)) as limited by 28
29 issues raised by the Notice of Appeal. Brakus v. Department of Labor & Indus., 48 Wn.2d 218
30
31 (1956). Superior Court has been found to lack jurisdiction in the instance where the Board
32
33 exceeded its scope of review. The Supreme Court has consistently held that the Superior Court
34
35 may not consider a question that was not properly before the Board. Hanquet v. Department of 36
37 Labor & Indus., 75 Wn. App. 657, 663, 664 (1994).

38
39 At first blush, it appears that subject matter jurisdiction and scope of review are synonymous
40
41 when used in the context of Washington State industrial insurance law. However, our Supreme 42
43 Court's decision in Marley suggests that the court's use and interpretation of the two concepts is 44
45 evolving.
46
47

1 The Marley court indicated that subject matter jurisdiction refers only to the kinds of
2 controversies the Department or the Board may adjudicate. A tribunal lacks subject matter
3 jurisdiction when it attempts to decide a type of controversy over which it has no authority to 4 adjudicate. The focus must be on the words "type of controversy." If the type of controversy is 5 within the subject matter jurisdiction, then all other defects or errors relate to something other than 6 subject matter jurisdiction. Marley, at 533.
7
8

9 There is strong tendency in procedural law to treat various kinds of serious procedural
10 errors as defects in subject matter jurisdiction. This is because characterizing a court's departure in 11 exercising authority as jurisdictional may permit an objection to the departure to be taken belatedly.
12 If the defect in the proceedings is treated as a matter of the court's jurisdiction, then under various 13 circumstances it can be a basis for attack on the judgment after it has become final. In other words,
14 the classification of a matter as one of jurisdiction is a pathway of escape from the rigors of the 15 rules of res judicata. If, however, the defect is mere error of law, be it either procedural or 16 substantive, the possibility for attacking the judgment is ordinarily not available. Restatement, 17 Second, Judgments, sections 11-12. The procedural rules governing the timing of a challenge to 18 the Board's scope of review have an important effect on the consequences of such a challenge.
19 Under generally prevailing procedural rules, the question of whether the Board exceeded its scope
20 of review may be raised at any time before the Board's decision becomes final, but not thereafter.

23 Following the instructions of the Marley court, we conclude the Board has appellate subject
24 matter jurisdiction in all matters relating to industrial insurance as well as other select controversies
25 as may be specified by the Legislature. At the same time, we believe there is a distinction between 26 subject matter jurisdiction and scope of review. Scope of review serves to limit the issues the 27 Board has authority to consider, restricting the Board to those matters already passed upon by the

1 Department of Labor and Industries. However, we believe Marley supports the conclusion that
2
3 scope of review is not jurisdictional, per se.
4

5 When the Board exceeds the scope of its review, it commits an error of law by passing on 6
7 an issue or issues not properly before it. In doing so, it is exposed to potentially dramatic and 8
9 unpleasant reversal either by Superior Court, the Court of Appeals, or the Supreme Court.
10
11 Obviously, this Board labors to stay within the scope of its review. If, however, the Board exceeds 12
13 the scope of review and its resulting order becomes final, the order is final and binding with respect
14
15 to the parties, the Department, the Board, and the courts. The rules of res judicata apply.
16
17 Committing error of law does not deprive the Board of jurisdiction. Courts do not lose subject
18
19 matter jurisdiction merely by interpreting the law erroneously. If the phrase "subject matter 20
21 jurisdiction" is to maintain its rightfully sweeping definition, it must not be reduced to signifying that 22
23 a court has acted without error. Marley v. Department of Labor & Indus., 125 Wn.2d 533, 539
24
25 (1994), citing In re Major, 71 Wn. App. 531, 534-535 (1993).
26

27 Applied to the facts of this case, we find that our Decision and Order in Docket No. 97 2041
28
29 became final. It is res judicata that Ms. Houle sustained a temporary aggravation of her
30
31 pre-existing asthma and emphysema as a result of her occupational exposure. We affirm the 32
33 judgment of our industrial appeals judge in the present matter. We overrule In re Darlene Ross,
34
35 BIIA Dec., 88 4379 (1990) to the extent it is inconsistent with this decision.
36

37 After consideration of the Proposed Decision and Order and the Petition for Review filed
38
39 thereto, and a careful review of the entire record before us, we are persuaded that the Proposed 40
41 Decision and Order is supported by the preponderance of the evidence and is correct as a matter of 42
43 law.

3 FINDINGS OF FACT
4

- 5 1. On April 19, 1994, the claimant, Orena A. Houle, filed an application for 6 benefits alleging that she had sustained an occupational exposure on 7 January 27, 1994, during the course of employment with Sitca
8 Corporation. The claim was allowed and benefits paid. On January 14, 9 2000, the Department issued an order affirming the Department's order of 10 April 30, 1999, which had closed the claim without further award for time
11 loss compensation or permanent partial disability. The January 14,
12 2000 order also determined that the claim had only been accepted as a 13 temporary aggravation of the claimant's pre-existing asthma and 14 emphysema conditions. On February 15, 2000, the claimant filed a 15 Notice of Appeal with the Board of Industrial Insurance Appeals. On 16 March 23, 2000, the Board issued an order granting the appeal, assigning 17 it Docket No. 00 11628, and directing that proceedings be held on the 18 issues raised by the Notice of Appeal.
- 19 2. On January 27, 1994, the claimant, while in the course of employment
20 with Sitca Corporation, was exposed to chemicals in the workplace. It is 21 res judicata that the claimant developed a temporary aggravation of her
22 pre-existing asthma and emphysema, which was naturally and proximately
23 caused by the occupational exposure of January 27, 1994.
- 24 3. The claimant's condition naturally and proximately caused by her 25 occupational exposure of January 27, 1994, has resolved.
- 26 4. Any further pulmonary restrictions from and after April 5, 1996, were 27 proximately caused by the claimant's pre-existing asthma and 28 emphysema conditions.
- 29 5. There are no genuine issues of material fact.
- 30
31
32

33 CONCLUSIONS OF LAW
34

- 35 1. The Board of Industrial Insurance Appeals has jurisdiction over the parties 36 and the subject matter of this timely filed appeal.
- 37 2. There are no genuine issues of material fact within the meaning of 38 CR 56(c) and summary judgment is appropriate.
- 39 3. As the claimant's accepted condition has resolved, she is not entitled to 40 additional benefits within the meaning of Title 51 RCW for her
41 occupational exposure of January 27, 1994.
